What is a shower enclosure laminated double glazing and why do you need it

Shower enclosures laminated double glazing is a type of safety glass used for laminated glass shower doors, which is the preferred choice for modern bathrooms. It's composed of two or more layers of glass with an interlayer laminate in between them to reduce the potential from accidental breakage and exposure to sharp shards.

This type of glazing not only adds an extra layer of protection, but also provides a sleek and contemporary look that complements today's bathroom trends. Furthermore, thanks to its laminate interlayer, it can provide a slight level of soundproofing, perfectly suitable for a relaxing bathroom experience. With its safety features, stylish appeal and soundproofing capabilities combined makes laminated glass shower doors the obvious choice in any modern bathroom setup.

How to install a shower enclosure laminated double glazing

Installing a shower enclosure laminated double glazing can be an intimidating process for many individuals, but with the right materials, technique, and tools it doesn't have to be. The first crucial step is to ensure you measure and cut the frame accurately so that it fits snugly into your wall. Once that is done, securely fix the frame into your wall using studs and rawl plugs before putting in place any additional backer boards. The next step involves attaching the door frames before you add in any seals around the exterior of your new glazing panel.

Finally, you'll want to hang your new enclosure carefully and adjust accordingly until it fits perfectly flush against your walls and floor. And voila! – You will now have a beautiful new shower enclosure installed.
